Ivan Pechishev, Associate Professor of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications of PSPIU, reminds about the need to be careful when using online resources. "The information appears in social networks that an electronic signature is required to submit documents. This is fraud, in fact, everything is much simpler. If an applicant has any doubts about something, it's better to go to the admissions office, they'll explain everything," said the teacher.

High-tech exams The university's own entrance exams will also be held remotely during the upcoming admissions campaign. Those who already have secondary vocational education, foreign citizens and people with disabilities can take the so-called internal exams, not the USE.

One of the ways to control the procedure of the online exam is a system of proctoring. It allows fixing the screen of the examinee, using a web camera and a microphone, which significantly reduces the chances of the applicant to write off or get a hint from someone. Student actions are automatically tracked. In addition, the exam is supervised by a specialist proctor.

"Vyshka" has been using scoring for several years now for separate exams on online platforms, and with the introduction of restrictions, the system had to be used en masse", says Dinara Gagarina, "Of course, with the need to organize distance learning, the university costs have increased. I will not name the exact amount, but the cost of equipment should be included here, plus it is necessary to attract proctors, as the forces of teachers alone are not enough. But proctoring increases the level of confidence in our estimates, so it is the price of reputation".

Proctoring is also vulnerable, Ivan Pechishev said, adding that applicants can bypass the system if they wish. "Another disadvantage is the mandatory availability of incoming equipment and good internet. We understand that even today not everyone has this. It turns out that we unwittingly limit the number of applicants," said Mr Pechishev.

Tests on the basis of the university are also required for admission to creative areas. So, in PSPNIU online will hold two such exams an essay for future journalists and a drawing for admission to the direction of "Design". The tests will be held on the platforms BigBlueButton and Indigo, hosted on the servers of the university.
